JOHNNY WONDER
Q. "HOW ARE DIAMONDS FORMED?"
A. You may know that diamonds are crystals formed almost entirely of carbon. Natural diamonds are formed in dying volcanoes, where great heat and pressure act on the carbon found in the molten rock. The pressure and heat turn the carbon into diamonds. Today most diamonds are mined from deep within the earth, and are found in "pipes" of blue earth that resemble the throats of extinct volcanoes. Diamonds are not naturally beautiful. Most look like dull pieces of glass when they are found. To become glittering jewels, they must be carefully cut and polished.
